TyRex Family Annual Holiday Party

Thank you so much to everyone who came out and celebrated with us at our annual holiday party at Dave and Buster's. We're entering our 25th year of business and are so appreciative of each and every member of our business family. The holiday party is a great way for us to bring the whole family together, kick back, relax, and raffle off some prizes to say thanks.

So what did people walk away with? Inflatable hot tubs, chainsaws, drones, and of course, cold-hard cash - just to name a few!

"I told my wife we should bring the bigger car, just in case we won a flatscreen tv," copywriter Henry Shepard said just hours before winning a 55" TV in the raffle event.

We are so excited to enter our 25th year of being a company. The growth we've seen and the impact we've been able to make in our community while providing purposeful employment to so many truly drives us each day. Due to your bright ideas and hard work, we've been able to be a profitable company and expand further than we could have ever imagined. The power of technology, 3D printing, and reliable business partnerships are what will help us keep moving forward.

We are halfway to our goal of being a 50-year company, and we couldn't do it without each each of you reading. We cannot wait to see all that 2020 - and the next 25 years - will have in store for us together!

CEO's Message

Andrew Cooper, CEO of TyRex Group

Recently, Andrew Cooper was interviewed by Olivia Meyers, a junior at Westwood High School, as part of a class project. From TyRex's Jurassic beginnings to its current Bright Ideas program helping shape the future, Andrew has enjoyed every step of the ride. Here are some of our favorite questions from her interview.

Q: How did you come together with your partner, John Bosch?

AC: "Before I met John, I was really interested in creating a company that was built to last – I'd written the initial part of a business plan for the company, and what it really showed me was what I didn't know. I needed to find somebody who could complement my strengths and my weaknesses – someone who understood the financial components, who had the strategic business acumen, and who really had an understanding of the importance of the financial levers that you have to have with timely information that allow you to drive a company forward. I didn't have any of that. I knew how to make money – I knew how to sell and market and all of those things. But I really didn't understand the financial levers that I had to have at my controls. That's when I met John Bosch, who complemented my strengths and weaknesses really well. And finding that perfect business partner is a challenge, but once you find it, that just makes life a whole lot easier."

Andrew leading a tour of high school students through the factory.

Q: What's been the key to your success?

AC: "When I started this business with John, everybody said to focus on one thing, and we focused on many things. I'm a dyslexic learner, so I learned very differently – and a professional entrepreneur will surround themselves with like-minded individuals and has to be willing to take their constructive criticism and go forward as opposed to the traditional entrepreneur who says, 'This is my company, and you're not going to tell me how to run it.' I think you have a higher probability of success in learning from others. And the one constant over 25 years has been change. We've walked away from millions of dollars of business, because of our evolution over the years. But we're still here, and a lot of those companies that were giving us advice when we started are no longer around. Because they just did one thing and refused to change, expand, and grow."

Q: What's it like to be an entrepreneur?

AC: "It can be scary. You have to make tough decisions. And it can be intimidating! But over 25 years, I've finally gotten to a point where I can sit in front of a really big customer and make a really big ask. I used to wonder if we were good enough to ask for more business – was I good enough? But I would say that I'm at a point where I'm comfortable that yes, we are. And as an entrepreneur you're always reassessing and reevaluating – and maybe that's the key. To always try and get comfortable with getting outside your comfort zone. I've been living there for a long time!"

We thank Olivia for her time with Andrew, and we're excited to have this interview as a lasting memory of the first 25 years at TyRex – here's to the next 25!

TekRex + Thinkery Bank on 3D Printing

TekRex prototyped and developed 3D-printed piggy banks to be auctioned off for Thinkery's Imaginarium 2019 event! Their STEAM-focused, play-based opportunities help children explore their curiosity and develop creative problem-solving skills. All proceeds from the event benefit Thinkery's mission to create innovative learning experiences that equip and inspire the next generation of creative problem solvers - something here at TyRex, we aspire to do every day.
